

Earlier this year I entered a home video contest sponsored by Boston Market and won 3rd place. Among the prizes was a $755 Boston Market gift card. I have spent the last few months spending it on friends and family and documenting all of it on my site 100meals.com. I decided it would be fun to take out local New York band The Big Sleep. The following is an account of the evening:

On August 3, 2006 I sat down at the local Boston Market on 23rd Street with the New York trio The Big Sleep. When I arrived Gabe was quietly reading at the window seat awaiting the rest of the band to arrive. "They play great music here," observed Gabe. I concurred and informed him that the day before they had a string of 80's hits on the sound system. Eventually Danny made his way into the dining area and we were just moments away from an all expense paid chicken feast. I proudly took out my Boston Market gift card and happily flipped the bill. Sonya, who arrived fashionably late had Danny order for her and opted out of any of the Market meats and stuck with an array of sides.

“ They play great music here ”

Danny had a signature drink concoction that he called the Pink Palmer - it's his own twist on the classic Arnold Palmer iced tea and lemonade combo but with pink lemonade. My standby ½ Chicken Carver sandwich was a favorite with Gabe and we compared notes on its overall tastiness. Danny went with the 'can't-go-wrong' 3 piece dark chicken, corn, mashed potato and cornbread combo while Sonya kept it on the light side with steamed veggies, string beans and seasoned potatoes.

The Big Sleep are a really great band and best of all really friendly people. You should check them out when they come to your town. And if they're hungry they seem to all enjoy Boston Market. 🍷
